- B. Invoices received from the CONSULTANT pursuant to this Contract will be reviewed and

The COUNTY shall exercise its rights under this Article 4 within three (3) years following final payment.

Upon the CONSULTANT'S request, the COUNTY shall consider the facts and extent of any failure to perform the work and, if the CONSULTANT'S failure to perform was without it or its subcontractors fault or negligence, the Contract Schedule and/or any other affected provision of this Contract shall be revised accordingly, subject to the COUNTY'S rights to change, terminate, or stop any or all of the work at any time.

ARTICLE 16 - ARREARS

The CONSULTANT shall not pledge the COUNTY'S credit or make it a guarantor of payment or surety for any contract, debt, obligation, judgement, lien, or any form of indebtedness. The CONSULTANT further warrants and represents that it has no obligation or indebtedness that would impair its ability to fulfill the terms of this Contract.

ARTICLE 17 - DISCLOSURE AND OWNERSHIP OF DOCUMENTS

The CONSULTANT shall deliver to the COUNTY's representative for approval and acceptance, and before being eligible for final payment of any amounts due, all documents and materials prepared by and for the COUNTY under this Contract.

To the extent allowed by Chapter 119, Florida Statutes, all written and oral information not in the public domain or not previously known, and all information and data obtained, developed, or supplied by the COUNTY or at its expense will be kept confidential by the CONSULTANT and will not be disclosed to any other party, directly or indirectly, without the COUNTY'S prior written consent unless required by a lawful court order. The CONSULTANT shall provide equal opportunity for subcontractors, vendors and suppliers to participate in all of its public sector and private sector subcontracting and supply opportunities, provided that nothing contained in this clause shall prohibit or limit otherwise lawful efforts to remedy the effects of marketplace discrimination that have occurred or are occurring in the COUNTY'S relevant marketplace in Palm Beach County. The CONSULTANT understands and agrees that a material violation of this clause shall be considered a material breach of this Contract and may result in termination of this Contract, disqualification or debarment of the company from participating in COUNTY contracts, or other sanctions. This clause is not enforceable by or for the benefit of, and creates no obligation to, any third party. CONSULTANT shall include this language in its subcontracts.

ARTICLE 22 - AUTHORITY TO PRACTICE

The CONSULTANT hereby represents and warrants that it has and will continue to maintain all licenses and approvals required to conduct its business, and that it will at all times conduct its business activities in a reputable manner. Proof of such licenses and approvals shall be submitted to the COUNTY's representative upon request.

ARTICLE 23 - SEVERABILITY

If any term or provision of this Contract, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances shall, to any extent, be held invalid or unenforceable, the remainder of this Contract, or the application of such terms or provision, to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid or unenforceable, shall not be affected, and every other term and provision of this Contract shall be deemed valid and enforceable to the extent permitted by law.

INTRODUCTION

Since March of 2005, Inwater Research Group, Inc. (IRG) has been conducting marine turtle population assessments in the Lake Worth Lagoon on behalf of the Palm Beach County Department of Environmental Resources Management (PBCERM). The primary objectives of these prior studies were to:

- 1) Obtain baseline data on species abundance, size frequencies, and sex ratios. These baseline data consist of quantitative measurements that can be used to determine stage-specific abundance, and in the future, determine recoveries or declines in these populations.
- 2) Determine Catch per Unit Effort (CPUE) at specific sites in Lake Worth Lagoon. This measurement allows for direct comparisons over time within Lake Worth Lagoon and with other ongoing research projects throughout the state.
- 3) Document the prevalence of fibropapillomatosis (FP), a potentially deadly disease that occurs at a high frequency among sea turtles in Indian River Lagoon and Florida Bay.
- 4) Obtain blood samples for genetic, sex ratio, and disease analysis.
- 5) Determine spatial distribution of sea turtles within Lake Worth Lagoon by collecting GPS waypoints for sightings and captures.

The above objectives have been met and confirmed that sea turtles are present in the lagoon year-round, identified specific areas of particularly high abundance, and provided baseline data on the abundance, size class structure, genetic origin, and disease incidence of marine turtles in the lagoon.

In order to take advantage of and build upon the baseline information gathered in the prior work and to gather current information on the population levels, health, and habitat use of turtles in a particularly important and vulnerable parts of the lagoon, additional efforts are proposed to gather data in the northern segment of Lake Worth Lagoon near Little Munyon Island and Jupiter Inlet (Figures 1 and 2). This proposal includes sea turtle abundance surveys as well as continued capture and tagging efforts that will include an assessment of rates and severity of FP. It will also further investigate recently observed differences in diet between seasons and study site. The primary objectives of the proposed work are to:

- 1) Conduct seasonal sea turtle monitoring efforts in the area near Little Munyon Island and in the vicinity of the Jupiter Inlet in 2022-2023.
- 2) Collect sea turtle abundance data on a permanently established monitoring transect near Little Munyon Island that will serve as an accurate index in-water abundance monitoring site for the area.
- 3) Conduct capture and tagging efforts in the Little Munyon Island and Jupiter Inlet areas to gather and document data on size class distribution and FP incidence and severity.
- 4) Examine dietary preferences of captured green turtles by season and study site.
- 5) Attach acoustic tags on up to ten (10) juvenile green turtles near Little Munyon Island to assess green turtle movement in the area.

EXHIBIT A

Sea turtles are viewed as an indicator species of the health of the lagoon. Long-term efforts to monitor the sea turtle population residing in the Lake Worth Lagoon is a valuable addition to the comprehensive program to restore the Lake Worth Lagoon being conducted by PBCERM. Local, state, and federal restoration plans include altering the amount of freshwater discharged to the lagoon, improving water quality, and constructing habitat restoration projects, all of which will lead to an increase in the amount of seagrass and other habitats in the lagoon and improve developmental habitat for juvenile green turtles. This project will help determine how sea turtles respond to these changes.

In 2019, a clear seasonal difference was detected between diet samples collected from green turtles captured in the winter compared to the summer at Little Munyon Island. During the winter, red algae were present in all samples and made up the greatest volume in samples (85.7% among samples), and seagrass only constituted 8.7% among samples. In the summer samples, however, seagrass (Halodule wrightii) was present in 100% of samples and constituted 81.9% of the volume among samples. At Jupiter Inlet, turtles were foraging predominantly on seagrass (Halodule wrightii and Halophila johnsonii) and there were little differences between seasons. While results from the 2020-2021 season weren't as clear due to limited captures and time in the field resulting from Covid-19 restrictions and inclement weather, we propose dividing field days between four seasonal (quarterly) sampling events at each of the two study sites to further investigate differences diet between seasons and study sites.

Since recapture and tag return data at the Little Munyon study site are sparse, the deployment of acoustic tags and receivers at strategic points throughout the LWL would be a cost-effective method for monitoring movements of turtles within the area. An acoustic tag-based study would benefit from the presence of nearby receivers by other researchers that are part of the cooperative Florida Atlantic Coastal Telemetry (FACT) array if turtles move outside of the lagoon. Additionally, researchers studying other marine species within the lagoon could also deploy acoustic tags and use the same receivers to study movements of their target species within the lagoon. IRG received outside funding to deploy eight acoustic tags and two acoustic receivers at the Jupiter Inlet site in 2021, but has yet to deploy all the acoustic tags. PBCERM provided funding for ten acoustic tags to be deployed at the Little Munyon site during the 2021-2022 contract, and while eight of those tags have already been deployed, we are waiting on detection extracts for these individual turtles from partners within the FACT array. Developing and maintaining a long-term acoustic array within the Lake Worth Lagoon system is a cost effective solution to tracking turtles, elasmobranchs, and fish, and to assist in monitoring the effects of lagoon restoration.

SCOPE OF WORK

Materials and Methods

Sixteen (16) days of field work to gather sea turtle data will be conducted. Field work will include eight (8) days of quantitative visual transects and capture effort focused on the area in the northern lagoon near Little Munyon Island and eight (8) days of field work focused on the area near Jupiter Inlet. Effort will be divided into quarterly sampling periods spread throughout the approximate 15-month period of the contract and all services will be conducted within this timeframe, dependent on favorable field conditions.

Visual Surveys

Sea turtle abundance and species composition will be evaluated using Haphazard Unmarked Nonlinear Transect (HUNT) surveys and permanently established grid transects.

HUNT transects will be conducted at both sites using the methodology employed in the previous phases of the project. The abundance data collected (observations per transect kilometer) will be directly comparable with data collected in the previous phases, allowing for a long-term assessment of sea turtle abundance at the selected sites. Data collected for all observations will include species, size class (juvenile, subadult, or adult), position in the water column (surface or underwater), and the GPS waypoint of the observation. Attempts will be made to conduct 40 kilometers of HUNT transects at the Little Munyon Island site based upon favorable environmental conditions. The turtles near Jupiter Inlet are clustered in such a small geographical area that a turtle is usually sighted so quickly that it likely biases abundance estimates at this site. HUNTs will only be used at the Jupiter Inlet study site when conducting exploratory visual surveys outside the main capture location.

A permanent transect grid has been established at the Little Munyon Island site (Figure 3). The layout of the transect grid was established to encompass the entire area of high-density turtle sightings in the Little Munyon Island area. The permanent transect grid covers a total of 10 km and will be run at least twice during the contract period when and if conditions are suitable for meeting the assumptions of density estimation (most importantly, when tide level, cloud cover, and water visibility allow for top to bottom visibility across the entire transect grid). Data collected for all observations will include species, size class (juvenile, subadult, or adult), position in the water column (surface or underwater), and the GPS waypoint of the observation. Large amounts of variability in the results of these surveys over the last few years have raised the possibility that the transect grid lines may be too closely spaced, resulting in oversampling (the possibility the same turtle is being counted more than once in a survey run). In this proposal, we use a revised transect grid utilized in 2019 and sample on that grid at least twice.

Captures

Capture efforts will also be conducted at both the Little Munyon Island and Jupiter Inlet sites. Captures by dip net and hand captures by the "rodeo" technique will be used to safely and efficiently capture turtles. Dip net captures shall be conducted using a large mesh nylon net with a three-foot diameter hoop mounted on a twelve-foot long handle. Observers in the tower guide the boat into position for the net operator in the bow to quickly "scoop" a resting or slowly swimming turtle. The boat then slowly follows the turtle until a dip net capture attempt can be made. If conditions of water depth and/or clarity or the behavior of the turtle are such that a capture cannot be easily and safely accomplished, the pursuit is terminated.

Hand captures (rodeo) consist of the boat closely following a turtle at slow speed until a diver is able to jump from the boat to capture the turtle by hand. Rodeo captures will be employed for turtles which are too large, in water too deep, or swimming too actively for the dip net capture method. Rodeo captures will be limited to waters greater than one meter deep for diver safety and to avoid impacts to seagrasses. The boat slowly follows the turtle until a rodeo capture attempt can be made. If conditions of water depth and/or clarity or the behavior of the turtle are such that a capture cannot be easily and safely accomplished, the pursuit is terminated.

When environmental conditions do not allow for captures to be conducted by dip net and rodeo methods, tangle nets will be used. Tangle net captures utilize a large-mesh tangle net 150 meters long by 5 meters deep, consisting of 40 centimeter stretch (knot to knot) multi-filament mesh suspended from a foam core braided polyethylene top (float) line with fixed buoys spaced 3.5 meters apart. The bottom (lead) line consists of small diameter lead core line. Each end of the net is secured with a small Danforth-type anchor. When turtles encounter the net and become entangled, they are quickly removed and placed on the deck of the boat. Using tangle nets increases the likelihood of bycatch for non-target species such as marine mammals and elasmobranchs, and therefore are only to be used when environmental conditions are not sufficient for preferred capture methods.

A minimum of 48 hours of capture effort will be conducted annually. All captured turtles will be measured, weighed, photographed, and tagged with flipper and implanted tags prior to release. Tumors associated with fibropapillomatosis (FP) will be measured and recorded on a standardized tumor score sheet.

Morphometric data will be collected for each turtle captured using forestry calipers and a flexible tape. Measurements include straight standard carapace length, straight minimum carapace length, straight carapace width, straight plastron length, curved carapace length, curved carapace width, and head width. Inconel #681 tags are applied to the trailing edge of each front flipper and a passive integrated transponder (PIT) tag is subcutaneously applied to the right front flipper. Before insertion of any tags, all flippers are scanned for the presence of any pre-existing PIT tags. Turtles are also weighed and photographed before they are released.

Tumors associated with FP will be measured and recorded at both sites on a standardized tumor score sheet. The total tumor score is used to assign turtles to severity categories. Throughout the processing period, the turtle is kept moist with wet towels and pads on the deck of the boat. Turtles with FP are kept separate from other turtles and separate sets of measuring and tagging gear are used. After all samples and measurements are taken (approximately 25 minutes), the turtle is released near the original capture site. After the release, tagging and measuring equipment is disinfected with a bleach solution. The rate and severity of FP incidence will be compared with data gathered since 2005 in the previous phases, with the goal of establishing any long term trends in Lake Worth Lagoon.

Diet

Dietary samples will be extracted from captured green turtles at both sites using a technique called "lavage." The lavage process flushes food items from the esophagus and mouth areas. During this procedure turtles are held on their back with their posterior slightly elevated. A soft plastic veterinarian's stomach tube is lubricated with vegetable oil and cautiously inserted into the mouth and throat area. Seawater is then pumped through the tube using a veterinarian's double action pump. The tube is gently moved back and forth along the length of the esophagus and dietary items are collected in a bucket positioned under the turtle's head. The extracted diet sample are strained through a fine mesh net (mesh ~1mm) and placed into a collection jar. A 4% formalin-seawater solution is used to preserve the sample for future analysis. Date, location, tag numbers of the turtle, and absence/presence of FP tumors are recorded on the collection jar. Dietary lavage samples from both sites will be sorted under a dissecting microscope and identified to the lowest practicable taxon by Karen Holloway-Adkins of East Coast Biologists in Indialantic, Florida. Due to the high number of recapture events at the Jupiter Inlet site, dietary samples will only be collected twice per individual turtle per contract.

Acoustic Tracking

Up to ten (10) turtles will be tagged with acoustic transmitters to document temporal and spatial distribution, habitat utilization, and potential movement of individuals within the lagoon and possibly into adjacent waters. Vemco V13 or similar coded transmitters weighing less than 25 g will be attached to the carapace by using a two-part cool-setting epoxy. Prior to attachment, the desired area on the posterior carapace will be cleared of epibionts using a scrubbing pad or light sandpaper. The area will be wiped with an alcohol pad and allowed to air dry before attaching the transmitter. Epoxy will then be used to secure the transmitter to the carapace. Drying time is between 30 and 60 minutes depending upon ambient temperatures and humidity. Turtles will be released close to the point of capture. The tags will send a signal to a series receivers strategically placed within the lagoon. The receivers will allow the team to monitor the movement of turtles within the northern Lake Worth Lagoon. Data from the receivers will be downloaded every 8 – 10 months.

Analysis

Two separate but complementary methods will be employed to provide quantitative data on relative abundance. The HUNT method visual transects that are associated with capture efforts at both sites generate an index of abundance expressed in terms of sightings per transect kilometer, which is used for comparisons of abundance between different sites, different habitat types, and to discern seasonal and annual fluctuations in population levels within a site. The permanently established transect conducted at the Little Munyon Island site can be analyzed using Distance 6.0 to provide abundance data expressed as observations per kilometer and thus be comparable to previous HUNT transects. Using Distance 6.0 allows for the variability in surface weather conditions and water clarity that occur between survey days to be accounted for in the determination of effective transect swath width, which produces lower variable estimates of abundance and also allows for calculation of turtle density, since the actual effective area of each transect run is calculated.

EXHIBIT A
