Description:

About 10% of American youth will experience social anxiety before the age of 18. Many will continue to meet diagnostic criteria in adulthood. Social anxiety and the related disorder, selective mutism, negatively impacts social relationships, academic functioning, and self-esteem. This presentation will provide an overview of the etiology of social anxiety and selective mutism and describe evidence-based approaches to treat these disorders.

Learning Objectives:

After completion of this presentation, participants will be able to name the following:

1. Describe the etiology and presentation of social anxiety and selective mutism in youth
2. Identify evidence-based measurements for assessing anxiety disorders in youth
3. Explain cognitive behavioral interventions for social anxiety and selective mutism

Presenter:

Rachelle Sosu, Psy.D. is a Florida licensed clinical psychologist (PY10888) who specializes in conducting psychological evaluations and providing treatment to youth and families experiencing anxiety, mood, and behavioral problems. Dr. Sosu completed her doctorate in clinical psychology at Nova Southeastern University and her internship and postdoctoral fellowship at the Youth Services Department (YSD). She currently serves as a clinical supervisor to doctoral and postdoctoral trainees at the Youth Services Education & Training Center while also providing family therapy, parent education, and Parent-Child Interaction Therapy to families with a variety of presenting concerns.
